THE TAHOE COUNTRY

ITS LAKES AND STREAMS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Truckee River Canyon, California - Nevada, on Southern Pacific Ogden Route

The Tahoe Country One of the grandest of mountain lakes is Tahoe. Its size, its elevation, its great depth, the splendid color and purity of its waters and its setting among the peaks of the Sierra Range make it conspicuous among the lakes of the world. But it is not alone in its glory in these highlands, shining on in solitary splendor; it has a hundred satellites in the forests and canyons roundabout, and it is at once the big lake and the smaller lakes around it that make the Tahoe country. They make it an ideal vacation region, easily accessible, at the right elevation, varied in attractions of stream and meadow, peak and canyon and unmatched in any country for the serenity and comfort of its mid-summer weather and the general freedom from insect pests.

Tahoe with its great indented shore line is a world of charm in itself, but the hills and slopes adjacent hold many surprises in the number and character of the lakes embosomed in forest and canyon, or set in granite cups on wide tablelands over which once passed the plowshare of the glacier. Some of these glacial lakes are threaded like beads of silver on little feeding streams, others are supplied by invisible springs, or kept fresh and cold by veins of ice water trickling underground from snowy peaks, and all are beautiful and romantic in their surroundings.

This lake belt almost encircles Tahoe, and these shining waters in the midst of rock and forest are delightful places to tramp to or to camp beside, places for a day's excursion or a week's camp fire, places to fish, to rest, to loaf and enjoy the piney air and the outlook from the peaks that rise on every hand.

In the Tahoe region are a hundred streams, great and small. Some of these, notably the Truckee, the Upper Truckee, the American and the Yuba rivers are famous for their beauty and their trout. Some are torrents dropping down from the snow peaks and supplying great cities with power and light. Some are murmuring brooks, slow-winding through grassy meadows, but all are alive with trout and are beloved of the angler.

Lake Tahoe This splendid mountain lake is twenty-three miles long by about thirteen miles wide. Its depth near Rubicon Point approximates 2,000 feet, and its elevation above the sea is 6,240 feet. It lies in a depression between the summit ridges or crests of the Sierra, and here also are gathered the smaller glacial lakes which constitute the shining girdle of unmatched Tahoe. To the west and south there are places where the landscape seems to be sown broadcast with them. They are reminders of the Age of Ice, these cups or basins having been scooped out of the granite by the glacial plow.

Donner Lake, near Truckee seen from Southern Pacific car window

Tahoe was first seen by the white man on February 14, 1844, when John C. Fremont and a companion saw it from a peak which they had climbed. They thought it one of the sources of the American River, and the explorer so marked it on his first maps. In the early fifties the lake was named Bigler after a California governor, but it was subsequently and sensibly called by its Indian name, Tahoe, meaning "Big Water" or "High Water."

It is easily reached by the Southern Pacific from Truckee, on the Ogden Route, and whether you come up from the Bay region and the valleys of California, along the ridges and beside the canyons of the long western slope of the Sierra, or from Nevada up the wild gorge of the Truckee River, the journey is attractive because constantly in the midst of fine mountain scenery.

From Truckee to the lake is fifteen miles by the narrow gauge of the Lake Tahoe Railway & Transportation Company, which operates a daily train service from May 15th until October 31st or later if weather conditions permit. This short trip beside the Truckee River to its outlet at the lake is most attractive.

Stopover is permitted at Truckee on both railroad and Pullman tickets, which privilege will enable those who desire to pleasantly break an east or westbound journey by a visit to this charming region.

The colors of Tahoe's waters are sharply contrasted, a ring of emerald with a heart of dark blue. It is magnificently set among mountain peaks, has every variety of shore line and is fed by many streams. This gives variety for the angler, trolling from a boat with bait or spinner for big trout in deep water, or whipping the tributary brooks.

There are many varieties of trout—the Rainbow, Eastern brook, Loch Leven, and Mackinaw. The Cutthroat—the trout with a dash of scarlet on each side of its gullet—is the one native trout common to Tahoe and its waters, and the most abundant of the introduced varieties are the Loch Leven and the Eastern brook trout.

The Lake Country Roundabout Scores of lakes are accessible from Lake Tahoe, or reached from Truckee or other points on the Ogden Route. They are shown on the map in this folder and are distant but a few hours at most from various resort centers. Many of them are very inviting, and will tempt you to pitch a tent for a few days while you explore the lakes close at hand. They will introduce you to new fields, to new beauty, to canyons and crystal pools set in the granite—"tarns" they would be called in Scotland—amid rocks and pines, isolated, and the haunt of squirrel, grouse and deer. Information about direction, distance, trails, etc., can be obtained at the resorts. Some tramps in this wonderful lake country will add to the joy of vacation days.

Independence Lake This lies about sixteen miles from Truckee and nearly the same distance from Boca. Reached by auto-stage and has a good hotel. The lake is about three miles long and half a mile wide with bold and rocky shores and great depth of water. Mount Lola, 11,000 feet high, towers over it four miles away. It is a favorite resort of anglers. Not far by trail is White Rock Lake, and a day's tramp beyond are Meadow and Fordyce lakes, close together, while to the south a short journey is Sterling Lake fed by North Creek. These are all camping places, having no accommodations. They lie north from Cisco.

Webber Lake About twenty miles by stage from Truckee. A choice place for fly-casters, who have established a private club. The lake is not open to the public.

Donner Lake Well known because the site of the Donner tragedy in 1846. It is but three miles from Truckee, and beautifully located amid pine and tamarack, with graveled shores and many inlets and small bays. It is about three miles long by half a mile wide. There is good trout fishing and a small hotel affords accommodations.

Cascade Lakes This is a group of four south of the railroad and reached from Cisco. Below them is the north fork of the American River on which Soda Springs, a resort, is located.

Five Lakes These are near Deer Park Inn and accessible by good trail, a pleasant morning walk, with heights where the snow remains into late July.

Eagle Lake—Cascade Lake Close by Emerald Bay and touched by the automobile road around Lake Tahoe. West and south are several small lakes. The Velma Lakes, eight or more and closely grouped, lie between the Bay and Tell's Peak.

Fallen Leaf Lake A mile from Tallac in a glacier basin lies Fallen Leaf, one of the most beautiful of all the Tahoe lakes. It is three and a half miles long and a mile wide. Fallen Leaf Lodge is at the southern end and many lakes are accessible by trails from this point. The Angoras, Cathedral, Floating Island and Lily Lakes are about a mile away; five miles westward, up over the rim of Glen Alpine is Desolation Valley with its chain of small lakes. A camp is maintained at Lake of the Woods. It is a good starting point for exploring Desolation Valley and the Pyramid Peak Range.

Angora Lakes, overlooking Lake Tahoe

Echo Lakes South of Fallen Leaf and close to the automobile road from Placerville. Tamarack Lake, Grouse and Rainbow lakes are just to the west toward Lake of the Woods.

Gilmore, Etc. Gilmore, Heather, Suzy and Grass lakes, all well-known to anglers, are easily reached from Glen Alpine.

Marlette Lake Is two hours by horse-trail from Glenbrook and has Eastern brook trout.

Watson Lake From Tahoe Tavern five miles by good trail. A popular horseback trip. Here Eastern brook trout are plentiful.

Pleasant Lake In the same neighborhood are Loon, Spider, Buck Island and Rock Bound lakes, accessible from Rubicon Springs.

This folder calls attention not merely to Lake Tahoe, its hotels and places of interest, but introduces you to the Tahoe country and may serve as a guide to the region, the many summer inns and cottages on the lake margin and beyond in the recesses of the forested hills.

Castle Lake, one of the many smaller mountain basins

Gilmore Lake, with Pyramid Peak in distance

Resorts Around Lake Tahoe

The resorts immediately around the lake are many, and are reached by the steel steamer "Tahoe" which makes the circuit of the lake daily. This is a delightful trip of seventy-two miles, the boat touching at the various hotels and camps directly on the shore of the lake. The steamer leaves the wharf at Tahoe Tavern every morning about 9:45.

Tahoe Tavern This is at once the stopping place of the train from Truckee and the starting point for the daily trip around the lake. Coming in on the morning train, a trout breakfast introduces you to the charms of this mountain tavern. It stands on a low bluff overlooking the lake, among tall pines and flowers, and it is
